

AbsoluteClimo Announces 2025 Hawai'i Hurricane and Guam Typhoon Landfall Tail Risk Forecasts

HONOLULU (19 February 2025) - AbsoluteClimo today publicly announces our ClimoCats™ 2025 Hawai'i hurricane and Guam typhoon season landfalls risk and tail risk forecasts.

- Hawai'i: We are forecasting no landfalling hurricanes for Hawai'i for the 2025 hurricane season, with a 20% chance for a marginal tropical storm strength storm to landfall the Big Island. The 2025 Hawai'i hurricane season tail risk in the Central Pacific basin is forecast to be somewhat below normal. AbsoluteClimo is the only enterprise (we are aware of) which issues seasonal hurricane landfall risk forecasts for Hawai'i including tail forecasts.
- Guam: We are forecasting one landfalling marginal typhoon for the Guam vicinity for the 2025 typhoon season, which is near normal. However, no major (Category 3 or greater) typhoon landfall is expected, which is below normal. Guam's major typhoon landfall tail risk normally can see up to two major typhoons starting at the lower exceedance probability level in the tail but AbsoluteClimo's exclusive 2025 Guam tail risk forecast for Category 3+ is up to one in the lower tail. Damage to property and loss of life on Guam from typhoons this season should be below normal.

The full landfalling (tail) risk forecasts for Guam and Hawaii are available to our clients.
